

WARNS AGAINST WHOOPING COUGH

Dr. Dixon of Health Board Says It Kills 10,000 Annually

The whooping cough season is here. "Already," says Dr. Dixon of the state board of health, "we are in receipt of letters saying: 'If we were to keep out of school all the children who have whooping cough, we would have only a dozen or so left in school, and, inasmuch as they had the disease in last winter's epidemic, we see no reason for preventing the whole crowd from attending now.'"

"There are still a few inhuman parents who think the children should have whooping cough, measles and mumps while they are young, for no other reason than 'to have it over with.' In 1912 the death rate per 100,000 in Michigan, from scarlet fever was 11.7 and in 1911 it was 7.9. For the same years the death rates from whooping cough were 12.2 and 8.1. Ten thousand children die annually from whooping cough in the United States, and a great many more are left in such a condition as to be unable to resist infection with pneumonia and tuberculosis."

"I would rather know that no boy will have an attack of diphtheria next week than to know that he will have whooping cough."

"Of all the so-called 'children's diseases' there is none that conduces to more serious after effects than does whooping cough. In order that the local health officers can handle the whooping cough situation in any community, so as to prevent a general epidemic, he must have knowledge of the first cases. Too frequently he does not have reason to know of any cases until there are twenty-five or more, and a very general exposure exists. Under such condition some persons should be given the benefit of the law which requires not only physicians but householders to report to the local health officer the occurrence of any communicable disease. 'The following is quoted from a recent bulletin from the United States Public Health Service: 'Houses in which cases of whooping cough exist should be marked with an appropriate placard.'"

"Any disease which kills twenty children per annum is a serious one. If tubercle plague were to kill that many children in the United States in one year, the whole world would quarantine against our country. A child dead of whooping cough is just as dead as a child of plague. A child whose body is weakened by disease is a potential economic loss to the nation. Whooping cough is a danger to be avoided and combated in the interest of humanity and the citizens of tomorrow."
